1. GADN News

GADN Members Meeting – 10 October 2011

A reminder that GADN members are invited to join us on October 10 to update other members of the Gender and Development Network on their latest activities, highlight their recent publications and upcoming events and identify possible areas of collaboration.

The GADN Secretariat will also report back and update members on the latest news from GADN. As part of this meeting, we will also begin to look at development alternatives and ask for members' views.

If you are a member of GADN and would like to attend, please email Lauren on gadnetwork@oneworldaction.org

New GADN Research and Communications Intern

GADN would like to send a huge thank you to Charlie Wilson, who finished her internship with GADN at the start of August. She has been a tremendous support to the Secretariat and GADN's Advisory Group and we wish her well in her future career.

We now welcome Jessica Summers, who will start mid-September as GADN's new Research and Communications Intern. Jessica is studying at Queen Mary, University of London and has recently returned from a year specialising in Gender Studies at the University of California, Berkeley. Jessica also has a background in social media, so make sure you are following us on Twitter (@GenderandDevNet) to keep up to date with the latest news in Gender and Development.

2. GADN Members' Update

- It is with some sadness that the Board of One World Action has decided to move towards a managed closure of the organisation. This was a difficult decision to take and was due to lack of sufficient funding to continue their work despite all their efforts. In light of their financial situation and also taking into account the changing funding patterns for international development in the UK the Trustees decided that it was better to take the decision now when they would be able to make arrangements for much of their work to continue than risk a sudden closure due to impending insolvency.

With the help of their friends and supporters OWA have achieved a lot: they have helped women refugees in Tanzania access legal advice; provided clean water to urban slum dwellers in Angola; enabled disabled women in Central America to claim their rights to healthcare and other services.

Although One World Action will be closing, they are pleased that much of the work will continue. They are delighted that Womankind Worldwide, a women's rights and development organisation, which shares many of One World Action's aims, has agreed in principle to take forward active programmes and projects. They are currently working together and in close cooperation with One World Action's partners to ensure that the best interests of the women they work with are met. For more information, please visit One World Action's website.

- One World Action have compiled a list of One Hundred Unseen Powerful Women Who Change The World to celebrate the impact of women who are powerful in different ways: they aren't celebrities, super-rich, or widely recognised or celebrated, but they have a positive impact on the people around them. The list has come through nominations; through networks, word of mouth and social media. The nominations include women from over 30 countries and span an extraordinary range of activity – activists, comediennes, teachers, inventors, healthcare workers and writers. They've divided the list into four categories: public service; human rights; business and entrepreneur; and arts and media. Visit the One Hundred Women website to see these incredible women.
- Orchid Project have been entered into an online competition by their Danish supporters to raise £17,000 to go towards their work to end FGC. You can help them by voting on the competition's Facebook page. Please note it is in Danish, so just follow these steps:
 - 1) First, go to your Facebook page.
 - 2) Search for PFA Brug Livet Fonden (copy and paste to make it easier!)
 - 3) On the opening page, click the thumbs up "Like" button
 - 4) The next page says "Velkommen", click "Stem pa en sag"
 - 5) Next page has a "Vis Alle" dropdown, select "Projekter"
 - 6) At the bottom, scroll through until you find the ORCHID PROJECT logo
 - 7) Click on it, then click "Stem pa sag" and that is it!
- Tearfund's Silent No More report, which discusses the untapped potential of the church in addressing sexual violence, is now available in English and French.
- WLUML have produced a new dossier, Dossier 30-31: The Struggle for Secularism in Europe and North America. Edited by Algerian sociologist and WLUML founder, Marieme Hélie-Lucas, this bumper dossier brings you papers by over 15 contributors, including Karima Bennoune: The Law of the Republic Versus the 'Law of the Brothers': A story of France's law banning religious symbols in public; Pragna Patel: Cohesion, Multi-Faithism and the Erosion of Secular Spaces in the UK: Implications for the human rights of minority women; and Gita Sahgal: 'The Question Asked by Satan': Doubt, dissent and discrimination in 21st-century Britain. Marieme Hélie-Lucas explains in her introduction that the dossier "addresses a burning issue: the specificity of the struggle that women – be they Muslim or 'of Muslim descent' – are waging in Europe and North America, and the way in which their struggle and their strategic decisions are perceived elsewhere, outside the context... Progressive forces in Europe are afraid to... be labelled 'Islamophobic' and racist. Bending to both the pressure from fundamentalists (a tactic we know well for they use the same one to silence us in our countries) and to the guilt feelings inherited from the colonial past, progressive forces fear above all to confront Muslim fundamentalists (and not other fundamentalisms), as they know that fundamentalists will accuse them to be 'against Islam', as they claim they are Islam and the only legitimate representatives of the true Islam."
- ITV's Born to Shine TV series has raised more than £1.778 million for Save the Children's charity work overseas with the help of UK aid and the generous British public. The money raised throughout the series will help save children's lives in the world's poorest countries, giving them a chance to grow up and fulfil their potential. Inspired by Save the Children's No Child Born to Die campaign, Born to Shine saw talented children mentor celebrities in a new skill in the weekly Sunday night series, hosted by Natasha Kaplinsky. Public donations throughout the final episode of Born to Shine going to children overseas were matched pound for pound by UK aid. By backing support for popular charity appeals like this, the Coalition Government's new UK Aid Match scheme gives the public a say in how part of the aid budget is spent. Save the Children's Born to Shine fundraiser is the first appeal to receive support from the scheme. International Development Secretary Andrew Mitchell said: "The Born to Shine appeal will mean a brighter future for thousands of children, and is an excellent example of how the public, the Government and the charity sector can work together on the shared goals of improving the lives of some of the poorest and most vulnerable people in the world." Donations can be given to Born to Shine until 30 September 2011 and the Government will continue to match fund donations for Save the Children's overseas work until this date. - Bretton Woods Project is recruiting a Programme Manager: Environment, Human Rights and Social Impacts. This leadership role is an exciting opportunity to make a real contribution to influencing international financial institutions so they work for poverty eradication, the environment and human rights. This is a great chance to help lead a dynamic and fast-paced networking organisation. Pay: £35,098 - £37,575 per annum plus contributory pension (10% of salary). Closing date: 9 am GMT, Tuesday 27 September 2011. Further details and application instructions can be found on BWP's website.

- VSO UK are recruiting a Head of External Affairs. The purpose of the External Affairs Department is to strengthen VSO's global fight against poverty by using the first hand experience of VSO's volunteers and the communities they work in to influence UK policy and public opinion. Managing a strong and high-achieving team, you will be responsible for delivering a programme of activities – through the media and parliament, policy development, advocacy and campaigning, to deliver policy change that improves the lives of poor communities around the world and transforms VSO's profile here in the UK. As part of VSOUK's Management Team, you will also be responsible for the overall strategic direction of the organisation and its contribution to international corporate performance targets, working closely with other colleagues globally to ensure VSO continues to maximise its impact. Drive the communication in the UK of our global strategy and improve the lives of poor and marginalised people. Closing date: 12 noon, Friday 9 September 2011. For more information, visit the website.

In the first maternal death case to be decided by an international human rights body, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) establishes that governments have a human rights obligation to guarantee that all women in their countries—regardless of income or racial background—have access to timely, non-discriminatory, and appropriate maternal health services. Even when governments outsource health services to private institutions, they remain directly responsible for their actions and have a duty to regulate and monitor said institutions.

GJC Call to Action: Urge the President to Issue an Executive Order Lifting Abortion Restrictions on U.S. Humanitarian Aid

Sign GJC's petition to President Obama urging him to lift abortion restrictions on U.S. humanitarian aid by clicking here.

The Global Justice Center (GJC) is launching a critical campaign to ensure that women and girls impregnated during armed conflict are provided with comprehensive and non-discriminatory medical care. The systemic use of rape as a tactic of war is horrifying, life threatening, and a war crime. For those girls and women victims who become pregnant, their suffering is exacerbated and prolonged by the near universal denial of abortions in humanitarian medical settings. In places where war rape is rife, such as the Democratic Republic of Congo, Sudan or Burma, the option of abortion could save the lives of many girls and women.

Rapes that result in pregnancy have significant, sometimes deadly, physical, psychological and social consequences. Girls and women raped in armed conflict face increased rates of maternal mortality. Further, where women are denied abortions, they may resort to "non-sterile" or "non-medical methods" which can lead to death, infection, scarring or sterilization. The psychological consequences of rape and a resulting pregnancy are also severe. In fact, the denial of access to safe abortion for rape victims has been characterized as torture or cruel, inhumane and degrading treatment by various international human rights bodies. Women impregnated by rape are often ostracized by their communities, face spousal abandonment and physical violence by family members.

Unfortunately, this group is denied complete medical care when the service providers tasked to treat them in humanitarian medical settings are unable or unwilling to provide them with information about or access to abortions. This can be attributed to the blanket abortion restrictions the U.S. places on all its foreign assistance, including humanitarian aid. These US restrictions contain no exceptions for rape or to save the life of the woman. Thus, all foreign governments, NGOs and humanitarian aid providers receiving US funds are prevented from providing the option of abortions to girls and women raped in armed conflict. These restrictions are unaffected by the lifting of the "Global Gag Rule" by President Obama, because the executive order revoking the gag rule explicitly keeps the all other U.S. abortions restrictions firmly in place. To comply with its international obligations, the US must modify its policy and practices.

In honour of the 62nd anniversary of the Geneva Conventions (August 12, 2011), the GJC is coordinating a letter writing campaign to President Obama, urging him to issue an executive order lifting these restrictions on humanitarian aid for situations of armed conflict. Let our leaders know that you believe girls and women raped in armed conflict deserve complete medical care. Please sign GJC's petition by clicking here.

Call For Papers: Reproductive Health Matters (RHM): Maternal Health And Maternal Mortality

RHM seeks papers (for the May 2012 journal issue) about why some countries are reducing maternal deaths and others are not and what has changed in the past decade. Millennium Development Goal 5 does not provide anything like an adequate picture of what needs to be done to reduce maternal mortality and improve maternal health. Even if countries were to achieve "skilled attendance at birth" for 100% of deliveries, given the limited definition of "skilled" that the poorest countries are forced to work to in order to come even near reaching this goal, maternal deaths would not fall sufficiently. Indeed, MDG5 slides over 25 years of evidence and experience of what it takes to make motherhood safe. So it's not an accident that it has been the least achievable MDG. In fact, it is only in countries where overall development has improved health and health systems since 1990, including access to good maternity care, and where abortion has been made safe(r), that any noticeable drop in maternal mortality has occurred.

With the best will in the world, neither the UN nor the megastructures called global health initiatives, currently pumping money into selected vertical programmes the least developed countries, have reduced maternal deaths.

This issue of RHM is a call to get back to the cruel reality of what maternal mortality and morbidity look like. It asks what countries are doing to prevent it – or not? In 1999, RHM published a multi-authored book called Safe Motherhood: Critical Issues. A whole generation of expertise on preventing maternal deaths is contained in that book. In 2007, the 20th anniversary of the Safe Motherhood Initiative, we devoted a journal issue to the question: “Is pregnancy getting safer for women?” We found reasons to celebrate and reasons to despair. Where deaths remained high, we found a clear lack of commitment, a failure to act and a persistent lack of finance in all the places where finance counts. The papers reiterated how much is known but not applied. Why has that knowledge been dissipated, not put into action? Who is paying the price?

RHM seeks papers about why some countries are reducing maternal deaths and others are not and what has changed in the past decade:

- what national programmes and services exist? what do they consist of? what have they achieved and not achieved? who regulates and monitors them? who is paying for them?
- do countries know what they need to know and how to find it out? how are they measuring progress? why is there progress in some places and no progress in others?
- are the same women dying now as 10 and 20 years ago, or different women?
- have more women begun attending antenatal and delivery care with a skilled attendant? post-partum care (if there is any)? what led more of them to start doing so? or if not, why not?
- what is the content and quality of maternity and abortion care? which health professionals are providing it? what competencies have they attained and are they able to use them?
- how to resolve the seemingly unending debate about TBAs? has anything changed for women since 1987 in countries where TBAs still attend most deliveries?
- are more countries carrying out verbal autopsies, sisterhood studies, maternal death audits, than a decade ago? are they keeping good clinical records, analysing and using them to make change happen?
- has information about maternal morbidity increased? is attention to the women who survive complications also increasing or not? is there more and more effective care for complications of unsafe abortion than 10 or 20 years ago? is D&C being replaced by MVA?
- are lifesaving essential drugs, equipment and procedures to treat obstetric complications and emergencies more available in resource-poor countries than in the past? how is the international war by big pharma against generic and affordable drugs affecting maternity and abortion care?
- what about midwifery and abortion training for health professionals in hospitals, primary care and the community – is that happening or increasing? are there fewer shortages? are there really more skilled attendants – what do those words mean in the training curriculum and practice?
- deaths from complications of unsafe abortion have fallen in some parts of the global South in the absence of law reform – why? have countries moved forward on making abortion safe and legal?
- why is unsafe abortion a dirty word in influential safe motherhood circles again, or not mentioned at all?
- are infants and children taking resources and attention away from women’s needs, in spite of the “continuum of care” ideal?

- why is maternal mortality no longer addressed as a part of sexual and reproductive health and rights?
- why only “mothers”? pregnancy doesn’t happen only to mothers – why have the MDGs been allowed to make a comprehensive women’s health agenda obsolete?

Something retrogressive has diverted the attention of those in power and even many neo-NGOs from recognising and addressing the reality of maternal mortality. RHM19(38) November 2011 calls for sexual and reproductive health and rights to be re-asserted on the global and national stage. This includes women’s right to safe pregnancy, safe delivery and safe, legal abortion, with universal access to services.

For the May 2012 journal issue, we ask: how can we bring the world and its leaders back on track and make change happen in countries – some thought-provoking commentaries from those with experience at the grassroots would be welcome.

Submissions due: ± September/October 2011 (negotiable due to late distribution of this call)
